The National Weather Service issues hurricanes watches when the threat of hurricane 24-36 hours, and when conditions are expected in 24 hours or less, a hurricane warning is issued. It is important to follow the advice of government officials and local law enforcement, so please listen when told to evacuate under their direction for the safety of you, your baby and your whole family.

For moms with infants, March of Dimes has many helpful tips for families facing emergency situations:

- Keep a list of numbers that are important including your health care provider, case manager and hospital and keep a copy of you and your baby's medical records and your baby's immunization records
- Babies have an increased need during emergency situations for comfort provided by breastfeeding, and it can also provide stress relief for mom. It is the best recommendation during hurricanes as you do not need refrigeration or clean bottles
- If you are concerned about the health of you or your baby, contact your health care provider or emergency room immediately
- After the hurricane blows over, there are still many precautions to take. Do not bring any babies or children into a home that has been evacuated from until it has been checked for gas leaks, electrical system damage and sewage and water line damage
